YOUNG PEOPLE remember [re]connect actors of memory

Set-Up Labs: Network – Design – Apply

In the funding program YOUNG PEOPLE remember, the Foundation Remembrance, Responsibility and Future, together with the Federal Foreign Office, supports innovative projects in international youth work, historical-political education and memorial work. The program supports international youth encounters and interdisciplinary exchanges of experts at and to historical sites of Nazi persecution and extermination. The funded projects are characterized by the use of contemporary methods and innovative formats that convey Nazi history at historical sites from multiple perspectives and apply pioneering concepts and formats in this field. Organizations from all European countries and Israel can implement international collaborative projects under the program.

In order to initiate new international and interdisciplinary partnerships at eye level and to qualify educators to develop and implement effective pedagogical projects, the YOUNG PEOPLE remember program offers the Set-Up Labs.

Design: the international project development workshop offers space for the presentation and discussion of project ideas in order to develop them further together with international partners. Apply Now

#developyourideas

The Set-Up Lab: Design is for all those who ...

- work in schools or youth work institutions, memorial sites, museums, documentation centers or NGOs in the field of historical-political education.
- are looking for new impulses for educational work with young people
- are interested in the topics of multi-perspectivity and participant orientation
- are looking for innovative project concepts in the field of history and culture of remembrance and want to develop new formats in this field
- want to discuss their own project ideas with like-minded people and receive and give peer feedback
- want to expand their international contact networks

The Set-Up Lab: Design offers the opportunity

- to meet other educators from all over Europe and Israel,
- to get to know the topics of participant orientation, multi-perspectivity and innovative formats in a deep dive in order
- to further develop own project ideas with regard to participant orientation, multiperspectivity and digital, analog and hybrid exchange formats,
- develop effective project concepts oriented towards pedagogical objectives

Our trainers:

Michael Metzger: Why, why, why: Curiosity is the driving force behind Michael's projects. The founder of the D.Network is convinced that the world needs more curiosity so that people can move forward together. That's why the consultant makes people want to discover new things in his formats. His texts, presentations and workshops inform, raise questions and inspire. He inspires with methods from design thinking and storytelling and enables other people to find innovative solutions themselves.

Frederic Gülbeyaz: As a design thinking coach, Frederic specializes in developing digital learning and exchange formats. From his several years of work as a theater and democracy educator, he brings professional expertise in interactive training designs, playful methods, dramaturgy and storytelling. He advises clients in the cultural and educational sector on the topics of new work, agility and diversity.

Sarah Staiger: In her profession as a photographer, Sarah learned how to build genuine connections with people and create a safe framework so that the other person can show their authentic side. This helps Sarah tremendously to this day. As a certified systemic coach, she gives workshops on topics such as communication, GfK or potential development. Sarah also remains loyal to the creative industry: she supports creatives in self-presentation and has a special focus on the empowerment of women in creative professions.
